

Imagine the joy of dipping into your own luxury swimming pool before you head off for the day's adventures, and relaxing in the spa at the end of a hectic day. At the weekends, you can gather family and friends for pool parties and soirées.

An elegantly designed pool, which harmonises with the interior design of the property not only makes a statement, it provides an abundance of opportunity to luxuriate, relax and have fun. A private pool can be designed to meet your every desire, be that classical or modern in style. Today's advanced technology means pools can be built even in tricky spaces – you can choose from a modern subterranean pool built in the basement to maximise available space, have a full blown wellness area and even a moving floor pool which, when activated, covers the pool, creating a solid floor that is suitable for any type of social gathering.

▶ Technological Marvel
Moving floors are on trend. This sleek leisure area, featuring a pool with a moving floor and custom-designed spa, is based below ground and required twenty-five metre excavation, yet you would never know this from the seamless integration with the rest of the building. The leisure area uses the latest in technology to offer a stunning and comfortable space for exercise, relaxation and entertainment. The moving floor can be set at different levels in the water, including at full depth for swimming, shallow for young children to play and splash and completely raised to provide a hard floor for socialising. The ability to transform an area in this way is ideal for properties in London where space is at a premium. The understated internal pool finishes in shades of cream come to life via rows of contrasting white and colour changing underwater LED lights. A textured black slate wall along one side of the pool adds interest, and is replicated on the opposite wall as a backdrop to the spa.

▶ Modern Elegance
This state-of-the-art pool is probably the most eco-friendly private pool built in the UK. This 20 x 3 metre minimalist pool runs on a fraction of the cost of an indoor pool of equivalent size. It is housed in an insulated building that seals in heat and the roof is covered with solar panels, providing all the heat for the pool hall and the pool water which maintains a constant 28°C temperature. The pool features sleek lines with high quality stainless steel floor inlets that allow heated water to return to the pool, giving an even flow to the liner letter box surface draw system set 40 millimetres below deck level. The low energy consumption theme is carried through to the pool lighting with EVA Optic high efficient LED lighting.

▶ Subterranean Leisure
This minimalist design matches the contemporary interior of the re-built residence. The overall emphasis is on light, with natural daylight entering from atria on both ends of the pool. Specialist halogen lighting is used throughout the pool area, along with mirrors, ensuring that this underground space feels anything but subterranean.

▶ Serene Minimalism
A truly avant-garde pool which has a strong connection with the outside. A key requirement was to create a juxtaposition between inside and outside spaces. The low eye-level glazing allows the user to look out into the surrounding landscape from the comfort of the pool. The specially engineered glazing slides back into the wall cavities, allowing integration of the indoor pool and the outdoors, with the building appearing to be unsupported when the glazing is recessed. The neutral colour palette is broken up by the stunning metallic-effect mosaic of the pool which like a horizon line, appears to have no ending.

▶ Architecturally Designed
This collection of super luxury pools has been designed and built by London Swimming Pool Company (LSPC) working with leading architects.
